MARITIME ENGLISH CORPUS

tlCorpus
Professional Concordance Software

https://tshwanedje.com/

Using tlCorpus Software developed by David Joffe and Malcolm MacLeod (advisor: Gilles-Maurice de Schryver), a comprehensive Maritime English Corpus has been compiled and designed by the compiler of the Dictionary. The Corpus encompasses the texts related to the wide definition of the concept of 'maritime English' and includes the subcorpora on the following:

- Ship design and construction; naval architecture; ship types
- Shipyards and shipbuilding
- Ship's hull, machinery and equipment
- Ship systems
- General seamanship
- Navigation and navigational equipment, navaids
- Maritime communications
- Marine Engineering, propulsion and auxiliary machinery
- Ship handling and manoeuvring
- Marine electrical engineering and electronics
- Ship automation
- Ocean science, marine geography, hydrography

- Marine meteorology
- Human resources on board ships and in maritime transport
- Health protection and wellbeing of seafarers
- Cargoes carried by sea, cargo handling and stowage; ship stability
- Ports and harbours
- Maritime transport and logistics
- Shipping industry and economics of shipping
- Maritime law and law of the sea; marine insurance
- Safety and protection at sea
- Protection of the marine environment
- Navy and naval ships
- Sailing vessels
- Fishing
- Boating and yachting
- Sailboat racing
- Maths and science
- Jargon, archaisms, figurative use
- Etc.

The 14 million word corpus (1240 texts) has been compiled from the web sources, maritime-related books, handbooks, manuals, journals, etc.

Today, Artificial Intelligence (AI) challenges lexicographic traditions and some modern methods and procedures. On the other hand, AI has become indispensable in creating textual data and corpora for dictionaries (mono- and bilingual), adding to the quality of modern dictionaries and making them more systematic and user-friendly. Therefore, modern lexicographic software enables the use of AI in all aspects of dictionary making. In this dictionary, a limited number of definitions, collocations and idiomatic expressions in maritime contexts have been created using AI.

NOTES ON THE USE OF THE DICTIONARY:

Headword (main entry, Lemma) = English language entries on the left-hand side of the dictionary.
Headwords can be:

(a) single words (cable, berthing) or

(b) multi-word units (berthing accommodation, berthing alongside)

Homonym = words of the same form but different, or partly different, meaning (cable1, cable2, cable3, cable4 etc.)

Pronunciation = IPA (International Phonetic Association) transcriptions are applied

= (other forms of the word) = derivatives, spelling variations, abbreviations, related words

Part of speech = n (noun), v (verb), adj (adjective), adv (adverb), prep (preposition), prep. phrase, etc.

Sub-entries = multi-word expressions (all red-coloured):

(a) a word or group of words (adjective or noun) + headword (marked by the sign ~), e.g. supply ~ = supply cable; electrical ~ = electrical cable; preparation for ~ = preparation for manoeuvre

(b) headword (marked by the sign ~) + a word or group of words, e.g. ~ armour; ~ gland; ~

Usage labels: = Labels mark the register (i.e. maritime-related subject field) where the headwords (terms) or sub-entries are used; In this dictionary these include the following:

arch(aic) sailing/boating/yachting cargo cargo handling chem(ical) communications el(ectrical engineering engineering (marine) environ(ment)	figurative financ(ial) fishing geogr(aphical) human-resources, inland waterways, insur(ance jargon, logist(ics)	mar(itime) law math(ematical) med(ical) meteorology navig(ation) naval arch(itecture) oceanogr(aphy) phys(ics) ports	sailing vessels seam(anship) ship_equipment ship handling & line handling shipping economics stability, italianism, UK US

Definition + source of definition Where available, definitions are given their source(s); other defintions are adapted or suggested by the author.

= References = references to semanically related word(s); lexical relations: equivalence, synonyms, antonyms; see, compare)

Sense 1, 2, 3 … = different meanings of the same headword according to their use marked by usage labels (e.g. naval architecture,navig, marine engineering, seamanship, ship equipment, sailing/boating, safety, cargo handling, jargon, obsolete, chemical, medical, UK, US, etc.)

Translation equivalent (TE) = Croatian language equivalents or translations of headwords and sub-entries.

Note that Croatian translation equivalents shown in italic, e.g. škeram, prova, štiva, blackout, lockdown podesiti, podešavanje etc. (mainly loan-words from Italian, English and other languages), are examples of sailor's jargon, local dialects or substandard forms in Croatian. They are frequently used on board ships or on the Croatian Adriatic Seaside.

Example + source of example = examples are mainly taken from web sources, either in the original form or slightly adapted

Note = notes are entered occasionally to enter comments on the usage of an entry or concept able seaman (=AB Seaman; able-bodied seaman) (n) = able-bodied seaman[1] = A.B.[1] 1 An Able Seaman (AB) is a qualified deckhand who performs a variety of duties on the ship's deck. They are responsible for maintaining and operating the deck equipment, including ropes, winches, and cranes. They may also be responsible for the maintenance and repair of the ship's hull, deck, and superstructure, as well as the life-saving and firefighting equipment. In addition, they may be involved in cargo handling and securing operations, and on most ships they have a secondary duty to stand watch as a helmsman or lookout. To become an AB, a seafarer must have completed specific training and have a minimum of 12 months of sea time. They must hold an STCW certification, which demonstrates their competence in a range of essential maritime skills, including firefighting, survival techniques, and medical first aid. Additionally, they must be physically fit, able to work long hours, and be comfortable working in a range of weather conditions. As an AB gains more experience and further certifications, they may be promoted to the position of Bosun or Deck Officer. AIS /,'ei ai 'es/ (=Automatic Identification System) (n) (navig, safety) Automatic Identification System (AIS) - Used to help identify vesels,to assist in target tracking (based on Global Navigation Satellite System), and to improve quality of information available to OOW. AIS continually transmits the ship's own data to other vessels adn VTS stations. It also continuously receives data from other vessels and VTS stations and, when linked to radar or ECDIS, can also display this data. AIS transmits: static data (MMSI number, call sign and name, IMO number, length and breadth, type of ship, location of position fixing antena), dynamic data (ship's position, position time in UTC, course over grouns, speed over ground, heading, navigational status, rate of turn), and voyage data (ship's draught,m hazardous cargo, destination and ETA, route plan - waypoints) (Seamanship Notes 2004).; AIS is a navigation and anti-collision tool enabling the exchange of ship-to-ship information.

automatski identifikacijski sustav, sustav automatske identifikacije brodova, AIS: AIS should be operational at all times AIS system is used to exchange vessel and navigation data including vessel name and call sign, length and beam, position with accuracy indication and integrity status, course, speed, heading and ROT and other specific information, all in real time. Data is shared with other nearby ships as well as coastal VTS (Vessel Traffic Service) stations. Vessels were usually tracked using AIS as manual acquisition and tracking was generally less reliable. All available equipment should be used by the OOW, whether be it ARPA, AIS or anti-collision alarms (COLREG rule 7 -Risk of collision). The vessel's AIS was switched off*. The primary means of navigation was paper charts. The IMO made the carriage of AIS mandatory under SOLAS V for all vessels of 300 GT or more engaged on international voyages from 31 December 2004. AIS is publicly broadcast via a VHF transponder device with the primary function of improving ship-to-ship and controlled water space 'situational awareness', such as major ports and traffic pinch-points like the Dover and Singapore Straits. This process enables engineers to analyse the ship's behaviour under various conditions, ensuring its safety and efficiency., © Damage stability analysis – assessing a ship's ability to remain stable and afloat in the event of damage to its structure. This crucial aspect of detail ship design helps designers implement measures to enhance a vessel's resilience against potential hazards at sea., (d) Full liaison with class and governmental agencies – essential during detail ship design to ensure compliance with industry regulations and standards. Collaborating closely with these entities facilitates the approval process and ensures that the vessel meets all necessary requirements for operation., (e) Intact stability analysis – evaluating a ship's stability in its undamaged condition. By examining factors such as weight distribution and buoyancy, engineers can optimise the vessel's design to achieve optimal stability performance while maintaining operational efficiency., (f) • As the owners' representative, our experts oversee detail ship design projects on behalf of the ship's owners, ensuring that their interests and requirements are met throughout the process. This role involves coordinating between various stakeholders to achieve the desired outcome efficiently., (g) • Production of stability books and documents – compiling comprehensive records detailing a ship's stability characteristics and operational limitations. These documents serve as valuable references for crew members and authorities, enhancing safety and regulatory compliance., (h) • Specialist stability analysis – including launching, grounding and drydocking assessments, focusing on evaluating a ship's stability during critical phases of its lifecycle. By conducting detailed analyses in these areas, engineers can mitigate risks and ensure safe and efficient operations throughout the vessel's lifespan. } blank sailing (=void sailing) (n) (shipping econ, logist) the cancellation or omission of a scheduled port or region by an ocean carrier during a fixed rotation. This is typically due to market dynamics such as low demand, which causes carriers to consolidate shipments and stabilise rates. (https://www.freightamigo.com/glossary/blank-sailing/); Blank sailing occurs when, due to various reasons, a liner service operator might decide to cancel the call of a vessel at a certain port or certain region, or the entire leg. When that happens, that particular port/region/entire route will have a "blank sailing" which simply means that for that week or fortnight or month (depending on the frequency of the liner service) that area will not have a vessel to discharge or load cargo (https://shippingandfreightresource.com/blank-sailing/); When an ocean vessel does not call at one or more of its scheduled intermediate stops, it is called a blank sailing or void sailing from these ports. (https://www.marineinsight.com/maritime-law/what-is-blank-sailing/); A blank sailing (a void sailing) is a sailing that has been canceled by the carrier. This clause arises because, under American law, a cargo owner is not able to make any recovery from the carrier for damage resulting from negligent navigation but may instead sue the non-carrying ship which in turn seeks recovery from the carrying ship in proportion of his fault. This would render a carrier indirectly liable for a loss for which he is not directly liable to the cargo owner. Every vessel has a captain, from the smallest yacht to the largest containership. The captain is the person in command of a vessel at a given time. …. Master means a person who has the experience and has passed the required examination to be licensed to command a vessel according to both international and national regulations pertaining to the size and range of the vessels in which the experience was obtained. Captain is a general and informal term referring to someone in the act of performing in that capacity. Master refers to professional qualification, captain to a state of command or authority. It seems like this isn't getting any simpler, but separating the historical meanings of captain and master shows us the way forward. In commercial shipping, master has an official regulatory meaning while captain does not. (http://gcaptain.com/call-captain-not/)} celestial navigation (n) (navig) Celestial navigation systems are based on observation of the positions of the Sun, Moon, Planets and navigational stars. Such systems are in use as well for terrestrial navigating as for interstellar navigating. By knowing which point on the rotating earth a celestial object is above and measuring its height above the observer's horizon, the navigator can determine his distance from that subpoint. A nautical almanac and a marine chronometer are used to compute the subpoint on earth a celestial body is over, and a sextant is used to measure the body's angular height above the horizon. That height can then be used to compute distance from the subpoint to create a circular line of position. A navigator shoots a number of stars in succession to give a series of overlapping lines of position. Where they intersect is the celestial fix. The moon and sun may also be used. The sun can also be used by itself to shoot a succession of lines of position (best done around local noon) to determine a position (Bowditch 2002) nebeska navigacija, astronomska navigacija practise celestial navigation provoditi astronomsku navigaciju primijeniti astronomsku navigaciju {Used primarily as a backup to satellite and other electronic systems in the open ocean.}

charterparty, charter party /ˈʧaːtəˌpaːti/ (n) 1 (mar law) a contract of lease of a ship in whole or in part for a long or short period of time or for a particular voyage. It has been said that its origin lies in the mediaeval Latin carta partita or charta partita or charta divisa, where an agreement was torn into two pieces and one half was given to each party. Proof of the whole contract was no doubt difficult if one party was obstinate - modern methods of photocopying the contract for each party seem preferable. A charterparty is part contract of hire (affreightment (supra)) and part contract of transport (carriage). The proportion of affreightment decreases as one moves from a demise charter, to a time charter and then to a voyage charter, while the proportion of carriage increases from a demise charter through a time charter to a voyage charter. Affreightment is essentially placing a ship at the disposal of another party, while transport is essentially the carrier (supra) taking charge of goods. Hire (infra) is the consideration paid under demise and time charterparties; freight (infra) is the consideration paid under voyage charterparties and bills of lading . ugovor o najmu broda, pomorski ugovor o najmu, ugovor o iskorištavanju broda, čarter, čarter-partija: The typical tramp operates under a charter party*, that is, a contract for the use of the vessel.; 2 ugovor o prijevozu

Fixed fitting (attached to ship)

Description	Purpose	Image	Notes
Flush socket	Locating base twistlocks or stacking cones in the cargo hold.		Normally fitted over a small recess to ensure watertightness. Clean and remove debris before use.
Raised socket	Locating base twistlocks or stacking cones on deck.		Clean and remove debris before use.
Lashing plate or 'Pad-eye'	Tie-down point for turnbuckle.		Designed only for in-plane loading. An out-of-plane (out-of-line) load could bend the plate and may crack the connecting weld.
D ring	Alternative tie-down point for a turnbuckle.		Corrosion of the pin ends can weaken a D ring. Suitable for in-plane (in-line) and out-of-plane loading.
Dovetail foundation	Base for sliding dovetail twistlock.		Clean before use. Keep well greased and examine regularly for damage or wear.
Fixed stacking cone	To prevent horizontal movement of 20-foot containers in 40-foot cell guides.		Often found at the base of a cell guide.
Mid-bay guide	To prevent transverse movement of 20-foot containers in 40-foot guides. Fitted at tanktop level.		Does not interfere with general stowage of 40-foot containers.

Description	Purpose	Image	Notes
Lashing rod	To provide support for container stacks on deck. Used in conjunction with a turnbuckle.		Resists tensile loads. Very long lashing rods can be difficult to handle and difficult to locate in a container corner casting. They can have eyes at each end.
Extension piece	To extend a lashing rod when securing 'high cube' containers.		Fit at the base of a lashing rod and connect to the turnbuckle.
Turnbuckle (bottle screw)	To connect a lashing rod to a lashing plate or D ring. Tightening puts tension into a lashing rod.		Resists tensile loads and is used to keep the lashing tight. Regularly grease its threads. Ensure the locking nut or tab is locked.
Hanging stacker	Used in holds when 20-foot containers are carried in 40-foot guides. Locks into corner casting above.		Resists horizontal forces. Likely to be put in place when container is on shore because of difficulty in fitting when on board.
Semi-automatic twistlock (SAT)	Placed between containers in a stack. Locks into corner castings above and below.		Resists horizontal and separation forces. Can be fitted on shore. Automatically locks into the lower container when placed on top. It is easier to determine whether it is locked or not when compared to manual twistlocks. Unlocked manually.
Twistlock	Placed between containers in a stack. Locks into corner castings above and below.		Resists horizontal and separation forces. Each fitting requires locking after fitting. Left and right-hand types exist, causing uncertainty whether a fitting is locked or open.
Stacking cone	Placed between containers in a stack. Slots into corner castings.		Resists horizontal forces. Many types exist. May be locked into bottom corner castings prior to lifting a container on board.
